

A photograph of a stone lighthouse situated in the middle of a turbulent sea. Large, white-capped waves are crashing against the base of the lighthouse, creating a sense of danger and isolation. The lighthouse is built from dark, weathered stone and has a few small windows. A person can be seen standing on a platform near the entrance of the lighthouse. The overall mood is one of resilience and seeking safety in the face of adversity.

Running to Safety

Proverbs 18:10

One stormy day in 1989,
French photographer, Jean Guichard took a helicopter and approached a lighthouse off the coast of Brittany, France.

A photograph of a stone tower, likely a lighthouse or a fortification, situated in the middle of a turbulent sea. The tower is built from dark, weathered stone blocks and has a cylindrical shape. It features a small, arched doorway at the base and two small, white-framed windows on the upper levels. A person is visible standing in the doorway. The base of the tower is completely surrounded by massive, white-capped waves that are crashing against its walls, creating a sense of immense power and danger. The sky is overcast, and the overall tone of the image is dramatic and somber.
